Formal Departmental Graduate Student Teaching Mentorship Program

Mentored two graduate students under the ECU Sociology Department’s formal “Graduate Student Teaching Mentorship” program, having had two of our graduate students each work under my direction for a semester. This program provides a formal avenue for graduate teaching mentorship by linking interested graduate students almost at the end of their academic program with faculty to work with for a semester. The goal is that, at the end of the mentorship, such students get a chance to teach a course or two for us before leaving. Both students that have thus far worked under my direction through this program went on to successfully teach courses (with sole responsibility) for us:

- Boniface Noyongoyo. Department of Sociology, East Carolina University Fall 2010.
- David Bergeren. Department of Sociology, East Carolina University Spring 2005.
